Market Promised For Local Gas In Columbia Lines Near Field

Surveyors running stakes for new pipe line to Columbia Gas Company's pipes at Cameron Mills—Belmont Quadrangle proposes to buy fuel within sixty days—Supply would go to Binghamton.

Work was started this week surveying for a second pipe line to take gas from the Addison-Rathbone fields. Rights of way are now being purchased from farmers through whose land the proposed line will pass.

The Belmont Quadrangle Company proposes to build the new line into the field. According to advices received from some operators here, Belmont expects to build a connecting link with the Columbia Gas Company line which passes near Cameron Mills, selling gas to the latter company. The main line need only be carried about three miles to connect with Columbia's lines at Cameron Mills. Gathering lines from different parts of the field would then take the gas from the outlying wells.

Belmont Quadrangle was the biggest operating company in the Wayne-Tyrone field, considerable of their gas having already been marketed through a line which was laid to Horseheads connecting with the Columbia lines at that point. Belmont and Columbia are said to be interlinking companies.

Surveyors were working on the line yesterday. Their stake lines were run through the Saunders farm, under the Erie tracks and across the Canisteo River on the bridge across the Arthur Reynolds farm and on up the hill across the Risley farm, towards the middle of the proven field. No contracts have as yet been signed by operators in the local field for sale of gas to the new line company. Representatives of Belmont are said to have stated they would be ready to turn gas into the new lines within sixty days.

The Columbia Gas Company has four lines which pass from west to east along the route of the old New York Transit Company. One of these lines is said to carry a pressure of only fifty pounds, which would make it easy to force in the gas from this field. Columbia's lines are at present supplying gas to Binghamton, but it is expected they will be extended to furnish fuel to other eastern centers as the supplies of natural gas are increased by more drilling.

The Donovan Construction Company through its subsidiary Southern Tier Gas Company, has already made the survey for a pipe line from the local field to Bath. The proposed work of Belmont may mean the local field will have two outlets.

When a market is actually opened for gas from the Addison-Rathbone fields, it is certain drilling activities will be resumed. Many leases within the limit of the proven field still have an initial well to be drilled upon them, and money from the sale of gas will furnish funds to continue drilling. Once the local gas reaches a market, revenue will start pouring into this community which will stimulate business to a large extent.

Henry's Wedding To be Staged at Woodhull Soon

The I. O. O. F. and Rebekah organizations are planning a big community wedding on September 9 and 10.

"Henry's Wedding" is to be given by a large cast of local people.

The committee representing both lodges headed by Miss Loie Williams, Noble Grand of the Rebekah lodge as president met on August 14th with a representative of Universal Producing Company, Fairfield, Iowa, and made arrangements for the famous production "Henry's Wedding" to be staged on September 9 and 10 in Woodhull. This production is something entirely new and different in the way of entertainment and promises to be the only "Henry's Wedding" to be held in this community this year. The outstanding thing about "Henry's Wedding" is that three couples get married, making it a triple wedding.

The costuming is unusual and spectacular and the newspaper reports throughout the entire country praise this unusual show.

It takes many local people to present this elaborate outstanding event which promises to be the greatest social and political entertainment of the year. Two outstanding features of the production are the Beaus and Belles of Grandma's time and the Colored Brethern and Sistern of the Mystic Shrine.

Full particulars will be given concerning these unusual entertainment features at a later time.

Indications point to-Henry's Wedding being the high spot of entertainment in Woodhull community as has been the case throughout the entire country.

No one can afford to miss attending "Henry's Wedding" at I. O. O. F. hall, September 9 and 10.

Watch for particulars in regard to cast and other details.

DUCK DEMOLISHES WINDSHIELD INJURING PARTY OF MOTORISTS

Troy — On Thursday evening, while they were motoring back to Troy from Mountain Lake, a party from Troy had a curious and somewhat painful experience with a stray duck.

Miss Thalia Wilson, Community nurse in Troy, was riding with her brother-in-law, Wallace Zimmerman and Mrs. Zimmerman and two children, when a duck flew across the road and crashed into the windshield.

Mr. Zimmerman was driving, and the crash was so sudden that his face was peppered with broken glass, and for a moment he was completely blinded and lost control of the wheel. Miss Wilson, who was sitting beside him with Nancy Leigh Zimmerman, a year and a half of age, in her lap, not only had the presence of mind to protect the child, but also caught hold of the wheel and kept the car on the road.

The windshield was broken into a hundred pieces as the duck went completely through the glass, and the bits of broken glass cut most of the members of the party. Mr. Zimmerman was most badly injured, though none of the cuts were serious. They were mostly on his face. C arol Anne, 5, had seven cuts on the face, the baby was only slightly injured, while Miss Wilson's injuries consisted of a bad cut o none leg and other minor cuts and scratches. Mrs. J. D. Wilson, Miss Wilson's mother, and Mrs. Zimmerman, who were in the back seat, though uninjured were covered with blood.

Eclipse of Sun Brings Heat Wave

Addison people took full advantage of the fair weather yesterday to view the nearly total eclipse of the sun. The sky was free from clouds through the entire duration of the phenomena, giving an unobstructed view of the vanishing orb. Everyone here who could get out of doors, supplied themselves with smoked glass or dark camera film to watch the rare spectacle.

The eclipse was accompanied by the most torrid [illegible] of the year, if not [illegible] years. Arthur Miller, local government weather observer, furnished the Advertiser with an authentic record of the change of temperature during the time of the eclipse which shows in an interesting way how the earth is attracted by the sun's rays.

At 2:00 P. M. yesterday, just before the moon's shadow began creeping over the sun, the official thermometer registered 102 degrees in the shade. At 3:15 the temperature dropped to 92 and at 3:35 the darkest time of the eclipse it went down to 89. As the shadow passed away from the sun the temperature again rose until it reached 95 at 4:20, just ten minutes before the eclipse ended. At 5:45 yesterday afternoon the thermometer still stood at 90 degrees, the highest reading record at that hour of the day this summer.

Thus the last two eclipses of the sun have borne out the phenomenon's reputation for bringing extremes of temperature. The total eclipse in February, 1925 was accompanied by intense cold, while that of yesterday met the greatest heat wave of the year.

Many Visitors Expected Here Over Holiday

The eyes of millions of people in the eastern United States will undoubtedly be directed toward the Finger Lakes region this week-end. Attention of the motoring public will be focused on the Finger Lakes section because of a radio broadcast that is sponsored by the Shell Oil Company, Thursday evening September 1. The broadcast is to go over station WABC, New York, WNAC Boston, WCAU Philadelphia and WGY Schenectady. Philadelphia will be heard at 9:30 P. M., E.S.T., Boston at 5:20 P. M., Schenectady at 5:25 P. M., WHAM at Rochester can be heard at 5:30 and New York at 7:22.

The idea behind the broadcast is to attact people to the Finger Lakes region, tell of the different lakes and state parks to be found within and around the section, and relate many interesting facts related to this famous scenic area. The various sports engaging visitors will be touched upon, including the best places to fish and enjoy sail boating and motor boating.

The Finger Lakes region is known as one of the most beautiful sections of scenic country in the nation, and Thursday's broadcast will bring it to the attention of many persons unfamiliar with the central part of New York State. Labor Day should see an increasing volume of traffic through this place as visitors journey from the western part of the state and Pennsylvania to visit the famous Finger Lakes region. It has been suggested that visitors be greeted over the holiday with the slogan of welcome, "Happy Days".

SCHOOL DAYS—WORK DAYS

The first of September brings each year the resumption of school bell ringing throughout the land. Boys and girls are not ordinarily happy to leave the free and easy life of the vacation months to pick up books and head once more for school. After being more or less independent of regular hours and duties for a period of time, it seems irksome to be told they must be in the class room with prepared lessons five days in the week.

That is hard for a little while, but soon the greater part of them get into the swing of school life again, renew old acquaintances and resume the multitude of interests that school holds for every pupil these days. It will not be long before the boys and girls will be happier pursuing the routine of work and play that now spices the modern school, than they were idling about during vacation. There are so many diversions for school children today, so many interesting things that they can do that life need hold hardly a dull moment for any of them, if they but decide to enjoy what comes along.

Life is not so different for the adult either. If a man is fortunate enough to get a vacation, he usually throws himself into the enjoyment of it. As the time grows short to when he must go to his office or shop to resume work, the idea holds something of dread because again he must hold his nose to the grindstone. The fatal day cannot be delayed forever, so finally he gets back to [illegible] disposed to labor as man can possibly feel. The first day or two back in the harness count little on the main job, but the greetings of friends take off the keen edge of discomfort work holds, and soon the man picks up old tasks laid down a week or a month before, with renewed vigor. Once into the swing of his job a man tackles his work with fresh vim the cobwebs cleared from his brain once more. Tasks that seemed difficult before, now melt away before his quickened powers, and the interests of life crowd up around him until soon he wonders what there was about his vacation which held half as much fun as the daily contacts of life.

The school boy, or the man, finds himself off to a new start after vacation; the world is at his door, for him to fight and conquer. What more could a man ask than a chance to work and fill his own place in the world. If he takes his pleasure as he goes along, work is play, and life one long holiday.

A TIMELY SUGGESTION

"One extra slice of bread a day
Will help to keep the wolf away."

Such is the advice of food authorities who share the benefit of their experience with those who make their food dollars and dimes go farther these days.

There are fifty different kinds of bread, but none better than what is made here at home. Bread and milk form an almost perfect meal, and it would be hard to find a cheaper meal. Bread supplies the most nourishment at the lowest cost of any of our foods.

In addition to helping our bodies, the eating of bread helps the rest of the country to break up the depression. One extra slice of bread a day for each person in the United States means sixty million more bushels of wheat will be consumed in a year. That will help the farmers and manufacturers, and in turn it will bring better business to all of us. My advice is to eat more bread, and to enjoy more different kinds of bread."

THE GOVERNMENT PRINTING RACKET

The United States Government scatters approximately 300,000 pamphlets, documents and bound books over the country every working day.

In the 1931 fiscal year the Printing Office issued almost 3,500,000 copies of printed matter. It is now doing still better. In the six months following July 1, 1931, the amount of type set was 129,000,000 ems greater than in the same period the previous year.

This is at a time when taxes of all kinds have jumped, in the face of a lowered national income. The government printing department offers a fertile field for some real and needed economy.

COUNTY FAIR TIME

In almost every part of the United States this is in many respects the pleasantest season of the whole year for the folk who live on farms. The heavy work of the year is practically finished. In most sections the harvests have already been garnered. And while there is still a lot of crops yet to be brought in, there isn't anything more that the farmer can do to improve this year's production. He has a little time on his hands now for relaxation.

So this is "county fair time", at least all over the North. The trotters and pacers are being groomed, and the sulkies overhauled, for the contests on the half-mile track. In spite of the automobile, the horse is still the farmer's friend and pet.

How many hundreds of thousands of farm boys and girls are looking forward to their chances of winning some of the innumerable 4-H Club prizes at the County Fair? It is these youngsters and their work to whom the nation looks for the continuous betterment of farm conditions and farm life.

For city folks the vacation season ends on Labor Day, but the farmer's real holiday comes after that. The only drawback, from the point of view of the boys and girls on the farm, is that in so many places school begins before the pleasant September weather is half over. But even the schools, or most of them, have to give precedence to the county fair and grant enough holidays, or half holidays, so that all the children can go.

If there were only one season in the year and we could have our choice, we would pick the autumn. This time of year, from September to Christmas, when the days are getting shorter and the nights are getting colder, and the sun is getting lower, when the season's work is practically over and there is time to think about politics and next year's crops, and generally take life easy for a while, certainly seems to us to be the most contentful time of the whole year.

THE FIVE DAY WEEK

The five day week in industry has been tried for a year or more in a number of important manufacturing establishments of different kinds and sizes, and the general verdict is that it works to the advantage of everybody concerned. We think is is something which was bound to come sooner or later. The period of depression from which we are now emerging has merely hastened it along.

In almost every kind of business in these days the Saturday half holiday is generally observed. It is not generally the case, however, that a full half day's work is done on Saturday morning. Some of the large organizations, like the big life insurance companies, which have had a five day week for their clerical staff for a long time, say that just as much work is done in five days as used to be done in five days and a half. Also, that their employees get such a definite physical and spiritual benefit from having their time to themselves from five o'clock Friday until nine o'clock Monday morning, that it has proved an actual economy to cut down the working week without reducing salaries.

We have too much of a tendency in America to make a virtue out of work for its own sake. A sounder philosophy of life is that work is a necessary evil, and should be regarded as merely a means to the end of achieving more leisure in which to enjoy the really valuable things of life. If the world's work could be done in three days out of every week, we think that this would be a much happier world in which to live.

ACTION—NOT SIGNATURES—NEEDED

In an editorial in its weekly publication, the Dairymen's League Cooperative Association of New York points out that the signing of a contract does not achieve organization. The contract is simply an indication of a desire to cooperate with other producers. The real test comes afterward.

The Dairymen's League is in a good position to know what it is talking about. It is being bitterly opposed in its effort to perfect its organization and enlist more dairymen in its territory in the movement to put agriculture on a higher plane. The contracts that have been signed by its members mean only part at a time like this—what counts most is the amount of effort and loyalty the individual farmer gives to the cooperative. As the editorial says: "The success of a cooperative organization does not depend so much upon what it put into a contract . . . as it does upon what the member puts into the organization after he has signed . . ."

The cooperative movement in the New York Milk Shed will succeed or fail, to precisely the degree the members stand behind the organization. A multitude of economists, public officials, farm leaders and industrialists have pointed out, time and again, that cooperation is the farmer's salvation. It is now up to the farmer to do the rest.

TAXATION RETRENCHMENT ESSENTIAL

In a recent address, a prominent American said: ""By borrowing to cover our current governmental expenses . . . we drain the capital of the country into public securities and draft it away from industry and commerce."

In 1913 cost of government was about $1 for every $15 of national income. It is now $1 to every $5. For every federal income taxpayer there are one and one-quarter persons whose source of income is the government.

The regeneration of the economic life of this country largely depends on decisive, immediate governmental retrenchment.

And Here's Hoping for a Better Year — By Albert T Reid

BRUCE BARTON

...writes of "THE MASTER EXECUTIVE"

Supplying a week-to-week inspiration for the heavy-burdened who will find every human trial paralleled in the experiences of "The Man Nobody Knows."

DAYS OF DOUBTS

Another young man had grown up near by Jesus' home in Nazareth and was beginning to be heard from in the larger world. His name was John. How much the two boys may have seen of each other we do not know; but certainly the younger, Jesus, looked up to and admired his handsome fearless cousin.

Bruce Barton

We can imagine with what eager interest he must have received the reports of John's impressive success at the capital. He was the sensation of that season. The fashionable folk of the city were flocking out to the river to hear his denunciations; some of them even accepted his demand for repentance and were baptized.

John's fame grew; his uncompromising speeches were quoted far and wide. The business men of Nazareth who had been up to Jerusalem brought back stories and quotations. There was considerable head-wagging as there always is; these folks had known of John as a boy; they could hardly believe that he was as much of a man as the world seemed to think.

But there was one who had no doubts. A day came when he was missing from the carpenter shop; the sensational news spread through the streets that he had gone to Jerusalem, to John, to be baptized.

John's reception of Jesus was flattering. During the ceremony of baptism and for the rest of that day Jesus was in a state of splendid exultation. No shadow of a doubt darkened his enthusiasm. He was going to do the big things which John had done; he felt the power stirring in him and he was all eager to begin.

Then the day closed and night descended, and with it came the doubts. The narrative describes them as a threefold temptation and introduces Satan to add to the dramatic quality of the event. In our simple story we need not spend much time with the description of Satan.

We do not know whether Satan is to be regarded as a personality or as an impersonalization of an inner experience. The temptation is more real without him, more akin to our own trials and doubts. With him or without him, however, the meaning of the experience is clear. This is its meaning; the day of supreme assurance had passed; the days of fearful misgivings had come.

What man of outstanding genius has ever been allowed to escape these trials and doubts? For how many days and weeks do you think of the soul of Lincoln must have been tortured? Inside himself he felt his power, but where and when would opportunity come? Must he forever ride the country circuit, and sit in a dingy office settling a community's petty disputes?

Had he perhaps mistaken the inner message? Was he, after all, only a common fellow—a fair country lawyer and a good teller of jokes? Those who rode with Lincoln on the circuit testify to his terrifying moods of silence. What solemn thoughts besieged him in those silences? What fear of failure? What futile rebellion at the narrow limits of his life?

Evils of Intemperance
Lesson for September 4 — Isaiah 5:11-16, 22, 23
Golden Text: Leviticus 10:9

Isaiah's sharp denunciation of drunkenness, hurled like a thunderbolt long ago is thoroughly timely. The liquor problem has never been solved. Intemperance is still a serious challenge to the stability of society, and its peril is peculiarly intense in our machine age.

Rev. Chas. E. Dunn

Unfortunately the clearly established facts concerning the menace of alcohol are obscured by the fierce controversy now raging over the merits and demerits of prohibition. Both sides are warring camps, and their psychology therefore tends to be that of military factions angrily circulating atrocity stories about one another.

What is needed is more light and less heat. The failures and successes of prohibition must be studied dispassionately. Above all, the place of alcohol in our modern, complex civilization must be scientifically approached.

Now we may cherish reasonable doubts as to the wisdom of the eighteenth amendment. But certain it is that the arguments against the liquor traffic are as strong now as ever.

Rigid tests have proven that alcohol is a food only in a very limited sense, that it is not a stimulant, but a narcotic such as ether and chloroform, and that it is a habit forming drug, a poison that lowers resistance to infection and physical injury, and may result in acute and chronic disease. Dr. Haven Emerson, of Columbia University, sums up the case against it, he says, "alcohol as commonly used by modern man here and abroad deteriorates the cells of the body; degrades the man; degenerates the race.

To be sure, there are eminent authorities who hold that the moderate drinking of alcoholic beverages is harmless. Yet the Life Extension Institute's handbook, "How to Live," declares that "the judgment of the majority of scientific men is against even the moderate use of alcohol."

The liquor issue is now entering a new phase. We have overstressed the power of the law. While still employing the strong arm of legal coercion, our main reliance henceforth must be upon education and public opinion, personally, would place more reliance upon her report than on those of the economists and statisticians in the world. The demands upon the Salvation Army for help are an accurate barometer of human necessities.

IN LITTLE OLD NEW YORK

by CARL H. GETZ

There are tobacco shops in New York which sell cigars for women, made especially for them. And they sell 'em.

Now and then you will see on the streets of New York motor cars equipped with colored tires to match the colors of the bodies.

The vogue for keeping tropical fish in the home has developed recently to the point where these pets seem likely to vie with the cat and the canary. Pet shops here report that business is pretty good.

There is a department store in New York selling an aluminum tea kettle with a whistle attached to the spout. As the water boils it whistles.

One of the humorous weeklies here has unusually large desks in its offices. In fact, they are large enough for ping-pong tables and each night at 5, desks are cleared, nets put up and bats brought out. Then the games go on.

A shopper here in New York has been trying to get a parrot with an old-fashioned vocabulary and finds it impossible. Plenty of birds are available, and some of them are fine talkers, but none of them swear. Inquiry among pet shops reveals the cause. It is all the fault of the radio. If songs and patter are not coming from a radio in the pet shop, they drift in from adjoining stores or houses, The young birds, fresh from Mexico, South America or Africa, at first utter only the cries of their native jungle. But soon they pick up shop talk and radio music, and a customer who wants a sailor's bird is disappointed when his prospective pet gurgles, "You'll just adore those love birds," or "Let's have another cup of coffee."

L. H. Wadsworth lives at 351 Wadsworth Avenue and his telephone number is Wadsworth 3-3096.

New York requires a daily supply of from 20 to 25 carloads of spinach.

There is a famous restaurant in New York known as Dinty Moore's. It is operated by an Irishman but specializes in favorite Jewish dishes.

Evangeline Booth says things are getting better. She ought to know. She is the head of the one organization in the world that is closest to human suffering. That is the Salvation Army.

The Salvation Army reaches down to the lowest strata of humanity. It deals with human beings as individuals in trouble. Its officers know better than anyone else when times are hard and when they are easier. So when Miss Booth says that things are getting better, I,

FRANK PARKER STOCKBRIDGE

GRUB—Cal Spencer way

The women of Berkshire County, Massachusetts, are getting to be about the best cooks I know of anywhere. And that is all on account of my neighbor, Cal Spencer.

After Cal's wife died, a couple of years ago, he went into the kitchen himself and made such good bread and pies and doughnuts that his daughter encouraged him to show them at the West Stockbridge Grange Fair. Cal did, and he walked off with first prize in five or six classes.

This year he is going to send samples of his culinary products to the Berkshire County Fair at Great Barrington, and the farm women of the county are determined not to let him get away with any blue ribbons. As a result, Berkshire County farmers are getting a chance to sample some of the best pies and doughnuts a man ever put a tooth in.

SMOKERS—lose last sanctum

One effect of the emancipation of women has been to leave mere man with very few places to go where he can enjoy the society of his own sex without feminine invasion.

The saloon used to be such a refuge, but they tell me that the speakeasies, in the big cities at least, have as many women patrons as men. They still don't let the women into Masonic and other lodges, but most of the railroads are finding it impossible to keep them out of the smoking cars. I traveled from New York to Washington a short time ago and found that the so-called "club car", formerly an exclusively male sanctum, had put in a lot of fancy sofas and doodads for the benefit of women smokers.

I see that Santa Fe railroad has put on a special smoker for women. If the girls want to smoke, they ought to have a place for it where they wouldn't get in the men's way.

I suppose everybody realizes that the figure of the average American man is not in the least like that of the ancient Greek gods, whose statues have been preserved from antiquity. But it was something of a shock to me to see the spindle-shanked, pot-bellied plaster model in the American Museum of Natural History which represents the average young American male of today.

Museum officials took the average measurements of 100,000 American soldiers on their return from the World War and have made a figure which, probably, exactly represents the typical American man of twenty-three or twenty-four. From an artistic point of view, he is nothing pretty to look at. He carries too much stomach and not enough legs to harmonize with the classical ideal of masculine beauty.

AMAZING—Olympic receipts

The most amazing statement I have seen in print in years is that the Olympic Games Committee has enough money on hand from admission receipts to pay back the million dollars which the state of California lent in 1927 to finance the preparations for the great international athletic tournament.

I do not remember ever having heard of a state or a government getting back any money that it had lent. And what makes it the more amazing is that there were 800,000 paid admissions to the Olympic games in this year of deepest depression.

It all goes to show that California is a wonderful state, and that there are still some sport-loving people with money left in the world.

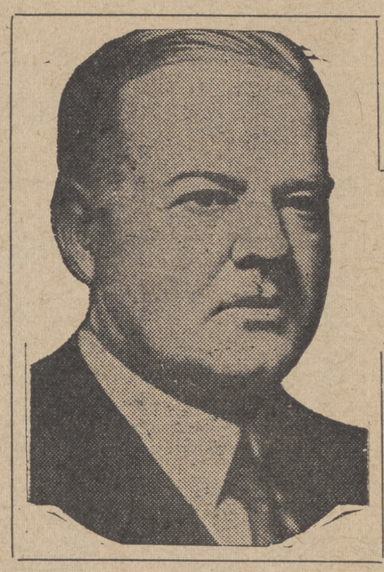
WRINKLES—Neckwear and skirts

The big industries of the future are coming out of the research laboratories every day. The latest is a process of treating cotton, rayon and silk fabrics so that they will not crease or retain permanent wrinkles.

That should interest men as well as women, for one of the heretofore unsolved problems of civilization has been how to wear a necktie more than three times without getting it all wrinkled up! And every woman who rides in an automobile knows how difficult it is to keep her skirt from showing wrinkles.

Barley, oats, buckwheat, and wheat, all lost money for the labor of growing them in New York state last year, according to farm accounts.

The Race Is On!



VS

The campaign is on! Each candidate is slowly organizing his followers and training them in the principles of the battle. Right down the line, from National to local ticket, politics will be on parade from now until November.

Campaign managers are adopting every conceivable manner of presenting the merits of their candidates. Speeches will crowd out radio programs, banners and life-size pictures will flourish throughout the land. Campaign buttons will displace flowers and lodge emblems on the nation's coat lapel. Arguing will take gossip's place in society circles and on street corners.

But after all presidential candidates are presented to the people only once in every four years. For many years the merchants of our town have been campaigning for your business. They have brought you their messages of price, quality and service through the medium of newspaper advertising and effective window displays. Their chief delight is in serving the people.

Their appeal to you during this entire series of advertisements has been one of fair-play. They are in the game, they are in to play and play hard, and a bigger and better community is their goal.

When the time comes for you to cast your vote this Fall, you will do so with a clear understanding of why you are voting the way you do, and when the time comes for you to buy your merchandise, it would be well to know why you trade where you do.

Politics may split your home this Fall but trading at home will bring about a peace of mind that will pacify all and make for harmony in the community.

Reports of County Children's Camp Are Given By Secretary

The 1932 session of the Steuben County Children's' Camp came to an end August 17th, the children returning to their homes in a very much improved condition. The best of food was served and carefully balanced meals were provided. During the season 1,17[illegible] quarts of milk were served and 84 dozen eggs. Fresh vegetables were used whenever possible and whole wheat bread and whole cereals were served every day. Miss Ruth Elizabeth Dean, dietitian states, "the main purpose of the diet was not only to put fat on the child but to build up his cells, blood, muscle and make him physically better to stand the winter". The average cost per week for a child was $5.06; total cost to maintain the Camp six weeks, $759.66. These figures include all expenses of the Camp. The actual food cost was greatly reduced by the constant contributions from different communities. The most notable contribution of this sort came from Canisteo, where the gifts made on three different days, approximately provided the Camp with vegetables, eggs, meat, canned fruit, jelly, jam, cookies, cake and other eatables, sufficient for the last ten days of the session.

Miss Edna Robbins, play director, divided the day into three play periods, the morning time of free activity, when the children built play houses, went fishing, caught crabs and minnows, played in the swings, sand piles and slides. The afternoon play period usually found the children in the swimming hole, while the evening period was supervised, organized games. These play periods were interrupted by a morning rest hour from 11 to 12 and an afternoon period from 2 to 3. Miss Robbins was constantly alert to show the value of good sportsmanship and fair play and the children received many lessons that should help to make them better citizens.

3rd	.92 lbs.
4th	.67 lbs.
5th	.87 lbs.
6th	.50 lbs.

The average gain per child for the camp period was 5.22 pounds. Of the 28 children who attended the camp, the most remarkable gain was made by Francis Twist of Caton, N. Y., 6.74 pounds.

Camp physician made three calls. Miss Wilma Standish, dental hygienist donated her services and cleaned the teeth of all children who had permission. Six children were taken to Alexander Hall, M. D., for dental work. Two children had their tonsils out at St. James Merch Hospital by Drs. Schwan and Whiting. There were also visits from Miss Stewart, Dr. Conway, Miss Haskins, State Orthopedic Nurse, Miss Deverent, State Health Department, Dr. Haggerty and daily visits from Mrs. Standish, County Nurse and J. Ninth Installment

SYNOPSIS: Johnny Breen, 16 years old, who has spent all his life aboard a Hudson river tugboat plying near New York City, is made motherless by an explosion which sinks the tug and tosses him into the river. He swims and crawls ashore where starts a new and strange life. He is ignorant, cannot read, and knows nothing of life in a great city. . . . Beaten and chased by toughs he is rescued by a Jewish family living off the Bowery in the rear of their second-hand clothing store. . . . Here he is openly courted by the young daughter. Breen fights bullies in self-defense . . . and soon is picked up by an unscrupulous manager who cheats him—until "Pug" Malone at the saloon-fight club, attracted to the boy, takes him under his wing. . . . On the other side of the picture are the wealthy Van Horns of Fifth Avenue. There is a Gilbert Van Horn, last of the great family, a bachelor, in whose life is a hidden chapter with his mother's maid—who leaves the home—to be lost in the city life—when Gilbert is accused. . . . It was reported the maid married an old captain of a river tug . . . rather than return home—and was soon a mother. . . . Under Malone's guardianship young Breen develops fast. . . . "Pug" discovers the boy cannot read—starts him to night school and the world commences to open for Johnny Breen. . . . Malone, an old-timer, is backed in a health-farm venture—taking Breen with him. There they meet and come to know Gilbert Van Horn. John attracts Van Horn, who learns of Breen's mother, named Harriet. Learning John's desire for an engineering course at Columbia University — he advances the money. John comes to know Josephine, Van Horn's ward. Now we find John at school.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

Suddenly John Breen stumbled. His hands shot out before him as he fell, something yielded, and in an agony of realization he clutched desperately as he plunged head foremost through the door of a night-owl lunch car, backed against the head of a slip. Light instead of darkness, warmth, and the steaming aroma of a coffee urn, not the slime and cold of the river! With a bound his senses came to him. A look of terror froze upon his face.

"Wodelyouhave?" The sleepy lunch car watcher roused himself suddenly and removed a pair of brogans from the counter. He eyed John suspiciously.

"Coffee." John uttered the word in a hollow voice. His head felt queer. The stuffy warmth of the car was grateful.

The man in the lunch car rubbed his eyes, shuffled over to a small cupboard, took out a heavy china mug without a handle. He dashed some white fluid into this from a can with a spout, and placed the cup under the tap of the urn, running it full. Suddenly John realized that he had on an old suit, saved for evening study, that he had left his room without a cent in his pocket. Even his vest, in which he sometimes carried change, and his watch, had been left behind.

"Wodelyouhave, doughnuts or pie?" the man asked.

"Hold on," John hastened to warn him, "I'm flat. Haven't a red cent with me. But—"

"Thought so," interrupted the man behind the counter, "but see'n yer so damn honest, have a couple sinkers," and he passed the rings to John.

"Thanks," John munched the doughnuts ravenously.

"Don't mention it. Keep the change." The sleepy lunch car man settled comfortably on his perch.

"I'll send the money down tomorrow."

"Send it? Rats! I took this job at supper, an' I'm quittin' at breakfast. The guy what owns it's married an' home sleepin' wid his wife. Damn glad you wa'n't no stick-up. Get the hell out o' here an' let me sleep."

John Breen again went into the wet. He looked at the river. A shudder of terror came over him. He turned and ran westward, the warmth of the coffee gradually wearing away. But as he chilled he knew that he had to keep going, he caught his second wind, he knew that he was heading for the dorms.

It was ten o'clock in the forenoon when the grayhaired dormitory maid entered John Breen's room. Damp clothing hung over the chair near his bed, and John, in fevered slumber, tossed in his blankets. He had returned at daybreak and throwing off his clothes and rolled into his bed half dead with exhaustion.

Harboard, on his way to an early seminar, stopped to investigate. John's door was open, the maid was talking volubly, the hall superintendent and a young doctor, a great bulk of a man, bent over the bed.

"Bad?" asked Harboard anxiously.

"Fever and exhaustion." The doctor, a famous football coach, turned to Harboard, adding with non-professional candor, "I can't make him out." He held a stethoscope in his hand. "Heart and lungs O.K. Know him?" the doctor asked.

"Well; we are rather good friends. He was all right last night, but—"

"Here, you mean?" the Doctor tapped his forehead knowingly. His [illegible] eye took in the disorder of scattered textbooks and papers.

"Engineering," explained Harboard "'Applied science.' Rottenest cramming system in the world. Kills them off quick, or, if they hold out, nine out of ten are mentally strained. Come out with case-hardened skulls that crack if they get ideas. Few of 'em ever crack," he added dryly. "What about him, doctor?" Harboard asked anxiously. The maid was tucking John in, and one of the hall attendants come up with some warm milk.

"Needs rest, I should say; nursing—a change. But what a body! Best all 'round specimen I've come across in a long while. Nothing overdone; smooth as silk. What is he, anyhow?"

"Been a scrapper. A regular knock-'m-out," Harboard explained, lowering his voice. "Something fine about the boy, though. He has ideas, that's the trouble with him. We were talking last night. I never realized his state, or— Well, thank God it's no worse. Anyhow he's got to quit for a while."

The doctor looked about. "Right. Complete rest, and a change. Get him out of this." He nodded forcefully at the room and its furnishings.

"Have you Mr. Van Horn's address?" Harboard asked of the superintendent. "I think he had better be advised."

Josephine Lambert was enjoying one of her periods of retirement, times when she sought seclusion, times when she took herself with elaborate seriousness. It was past ten in the evening; she was absorbed in the life story of Marie Bashkirtseff. Her long lashes, dark in contrast with her hair, gave her an air of study, a bare knee peeped from the white folds of her gown, a pink roguish knee. Her feet were doubled under her.

Josephine was reading the strange will of Marie Bashkirtseff. "I do not think I have ever had any base, interested, depraved thoughts. It is rarely that one can say this, but in my case it is true."

On the night Josephine was reading Bashkirtseff, and later on leisurely preparing for bed, John Breen was coming to the breakaway with his overload of study. Josephine lingered in the warmth of her bedroom, a fire burning in the grate. Aunt Wen had gone to bed but Josephine was very much awake.

She had taken John Breen's photograph from Van Horn's room, the one in short fighting trunks, his right fist guarding his abdomen, his left advanced, his eyes straight ahead, a stiff pompadour rising from his forehead. John had a look of the most insolent confidence on his determined face.

Josephine looked at John's picture. She smiled. Putting it on her dresser she dropped her robe and stood before the tall mirrors; for a moment she assumed the pose of the fighter. "I strip neat, myself," she murmured, coloring. And then she slipped into her pajamas and jumped into the big bed under the canopy.

Her hand reached for the light switch. She looked over at the photograph. "Young prize fighter, I'd have you dizzy, if you were here." And then she laughed. What would Marie Bashkirtseff have done, with a fighter?

Van Horn motored down from Greenbough, tearing at a wild pace, Pug Malone at his side and Judge Kelly in the back bouncing about like a rubber ball. The heavy Rolls took the road with smooth workmanlike speed. A telegram, from Harboard, had located Van Horn at the farm. [illegible] was sick. The thing was in[illegible]le. In the meantime the house[illegible]e middle fifties was astir, [illegible]nine in a flutter. Had she[illegible]med this, or what?

Many Letter Men On 1932 Cornell U. Football Squad

Ithaca, N. Y., August 27—The football warriors of Cornell University will assemble on Schoellkopf Field on September 5, for the opening session of the Red and White's forty-fifth football season. Conforming to the traditional policy of head coach Gilmour Dobie, who is beginning his thirteenth year in this capacity, invitations have been sent to all football men who have had experience on the varsity or freshman squads of last year. A total of 85 undergraduates have been called for preliminary practice. Coach Dobie makes no cuts in his squad, thus assuring training for all who care to participate in the sport.

The assistant coaches for this year, named today, are all men who have played on Dobie coached teams at Cornell. John F. Anderson '28, recently crowned Olympic discus champion, is the new addition to the staff. The others are J. P. Tatersfield of Philadelphia, Norman Scott of Attleboro, Mass., and Francis Lueder of Jacksonville, N. Y.

Of the nineteen letter men on last year's team, 11 and possibly 12 will be available. The exception is W. B. Penney, veteran center, who may be lost to the team by reason of his matriculation in the Medical College in New York. Penney was ill last spring and may not be able to begin his medical work this autumn. A particularly bright ray is the fact that Abe George, letter man and tackle of two years ago, has been restored to good standing and will play his usual position on the line. George has gained in weight and is in fine condition. He will be welcomed in the line where he was formerly a tower on the defense and a spirited offensive player.

Lost to the team are captain C. M. Martinez-Zorilla, tackle; N. Rothstein, tackle; Phil Kline back; A. G. Allen, end; Lester Handleman, quarterback; and I. V. Tullar, guard. All have been lost by the garduation route except Kline who withdrew because of scholastic difficulties. Handleman died this summer of septic poisoning.

Lettermen remaining are Bart Viviano, captain and half back, Jose Martinez-Zorilla, veteran end; Shaub guard; Reiber, end; Beyer, half back; Farraro, quarter back; Murdock, tackle; Kossack, guard; Lundin, tackle; Beall, full back; Hedden, full back.

From the freshman team are available Donald Anderson, Tom Borland, Albert Frederick, Frank Irving, and Walter Switzer, together with a number of other freshman numeral winners.

The Cornell schedule follows:

Sept. 24, University of Buffalo at Ithaca.

Oct. 1, Niagara University at Ithaca; 8, University of Richmond at Ithaca; 15, Princeton at Princeton; 28, Columbia at Baker Field, New York.

There's Money in a Garden — By A. J. Pratt

IMPROVING THE BAD SPOTS

Drain the wet spots in the garden
When the soil may bake and harden;
Have a lot of compost nigh
To fill the spots that are too dry.

August is the best time to plan to improve the bad spots in your garden because they show up best, or at their worst, at this time of year. The first consideration is, "Why are the crops poorer there than in the better spots?" Are they injured by drought or are they too wet? Is the soil heavy and does it bake more, or is it just a lack of fertility? Whatever the cause, try to determine what it is and then correct it as soon as the crop is harvested.

If the garden has wet spots it should be drained. This can be done with tile or an open ditch. Where the reverse is true, that is, where some spots seem to suffer from drought more than others, two cures are possible. The first and immediate cure is to water these spots, but the better long-time cure is to work an extra amount of organic matter into this soil. This may be in the form of compost described in last week's article, or it may be just a large application of manure. In some gardens it may mean growing a crop of soybeans next year, in place of the garden crop, and plowing or spading under the green crop.

The addition of organic matter to a soil improves its physical condition, makes it less subject to "baking", easier to work, less affected by drought, and more fertile. Commercial fertilizer is indispensable, but much of its value is lost unless the soil is in good physical condition.

The free Cornell bulletin about the family garden is useful for suggestions about the second garden crop, next year's plans, storage for this pear's crops and other helpful garden hints. Ask the office of publication at the New York state college of agriculture at Ithaca, N. Y. for E-74.

Grape Festival To Be October 8

Will Be Held at Hammondsport, October 8.

The first annual harvest festival of the grape belt will be held at Hammondsport, October 8. The event is being planned by the Farm Bureau grape committees in cooperation with the Finger Lakes Association and the Hammondsport Chamber of Commerce. The festival is a part of the grape advertising program of the farm bureaus of Schuyler, Seneca, Yates, Ontario, and Steuben Counties.

A program of sports, music and pageantry has been planned and the event promises to be one of the most colorful ever held in this part of the state. The site of the festival will be at the foot of Lake Keuka on the farm of C. D. Champlin. This is one of the most beautiful sites on the lake. Elaborate plans are being made for the entertainment of thousands of guests who will attend the event.

There will be a display of floats, entries coming from a dozen or fifteen cities and villages throughout the Finger Lakes region. There will be exhibits of grape products and a big display of the varieties of grapes in the region. Many communities will be represented by a band at the festival. The history of the grape industry of central New York will be prepared by students of Keuka College and a queen will be crowned.

The festival is a part of the program being promoted by the farm-bureaus of the finger lakes region for the improvement of the grape industry. In addition the crop is being advertised by newspaper and radio publicity by an elaborate exhibit at the State Fair. Thousands of attractive posters will be distributed throughout the eastern part of the county where Finger Lakes grapes are sold and housewives will be instructed in the uses of grapes with recipe leaflets.

Twenty-five New York state weekly newspapers printed 426 farm articles, totaling 2847 column inches, in three consecutive November issues of 1926, and 617 articles totaling 3977 inches in similar issues of 1931.

White felt hats may be cleaned with a mixture of one quart of corn meal and one cup each of salt and flour. Rub the mixture into the felt, let stand overnight, and brush it off. Spots of dirt may be removed by art gum.

VERY LATEST — By Patricia Dow

Neckline and sleeves feature this fall suit, which is being shown in lightweight woolens or silk. In black silk or off-brandywine shades it has caught the fancy for early wear and it is so popular that the model in light wool will carry on over to the later season.

The drop shoulder effect is accentuated by the bell - flounced sleeves which are three-quarter length to permit full display of the gauntlet glove, a vogue which made an extremely popular bid to feminine fancy.

The neckline speaks for itself, a clever adaption of the high line, but not overlooking to carry out the motif which dominates the suit—the inverted flounce of sleeve, cleverly executed. Silver fox furs will enjoy their greatest season this fall—and if worn with this suit will add a chic which few other garments could equal.

"Editor Alfred E. Smith" Need Not Help Roosevelt

Albany, Aug. 30.—Alfred E. Smith has been a good many things—Fulton Fish Market boy in New York City, Assemblyman, Sheriff, President of a big trucking firm, four times Governor, candidate for President, banker, directing genius of the world's tallest building. Now he has gone a step higher. He is to be an editor. In fact, he is to be Editor-in-chief of the Outlook magazine, taking the chair once occupied by Henry Ward Beecher and later by Theodore Roosevelt. Smith's friends here believe he was mighty pleased to get the job just at this time—not that he needs the money, for he has doubtless become a very wealthy man; nor for the mere glory of it. But particularly because it gives him a good excuse for resisting all the pressure brought to bear on him to do something, be it ever so little, to help the Roosevelt-Garner ticket.

Proves Fine Alibi

One Democratic State Chairman from the West, it will be recalled, said that "a good hearty, Roosevelt-Garner speech by Al Smith would be worth a million votes." But evidently it's not to come. From his editorial chair in New York Smith told newspaper men, "Politics is out the window, a hundred miles out the window". Probably it is for the present. But as one of his Albany friends remarked on hearing of the new job: "Well, that gives Al an 'out' on the Roosevelt business without laying him open to party disloyalty, it will bring him before the public in a favorable light every month—and if there should arise a demand for a candidate for Mayor of New York, or United States Senator, or President of the United States, or something, why, who knows what might happen? He is only fifty-nine."

Republican Outlook Bright

A 1200-mile tour of the State, in which he conferred with about all of the Republican County Chairmen and many other party leaders, has made State Chairman Macy more confident than ever that New York will give its electoral vote to Hoover this fall, and will also elect a complete Republican ticket and send to Washington a Senator and two Congressmen-at-large. This conclusion is based on the spirit of harmony and enthusiasm which prevades the party over the State.

Hoover's Great Speech

The situation, while good before, has been improved by President Hoover's acceptance speech. Apparently in every community large numbers of people heard it, and so enthusiastic were they over it that many others were led to read it. The simple manner in which it places the issues of the campaign before the people, the straightforward fashion in which the President states his position upon them, and the absence of personal abuse, made a deep and lasting impression.

He's Forgotten No Longer

Well, the "forgotten man" is forgotten no longer. He has been double, triple and even quadruply remembered, all in one evening. The Democratic candidate for president, the Democratic National Chairman, and the Chairman of the Democratic National Finance Committees all called on him over the raido from Albany, New York and Indianapolis. They asked him to chip in anything from a dollar up on the Democratic campaign fund on the ground that Messrs. Roosevelt and Garner can't do anything for him unless they are elected and they can't be elected without money to run their campaign. Back of that, though they don't stress it, is the fact that outside of a very few, the substantial men of their party have so little faith in the Democratic nominees that they are not coming forward with contributions. Add to this the fact that there is still a debt of some $420,000 hanging over from the campaign of four years ago, and it is seen the situation is anything but encouraging. A John J. Raskob would be welcomed right now with open arms, and few questions asked.

The Radio in the Campaign

Quite clearly the radio is going to play an important part in the present campaign. Large audiences have been reached directly, it is true, by the principal addresses so far delivered, such as the acceptance speeches of the two candidates for President, but they were only a fraction of the far-flung audience of radio listeners. More-over, the regular old-style political meeting is likely to be attended almost altogether by members of the party holding it, while a fair percentage of the radio audience will be made up of those of opposite political faith. But it must be admitted that both methods are rather too fleeting for one who desires to be well informed on political issues, unless he makes notes as he listens. A better way is to read the arguments with care, then do a little weighing and thinking on your own account. For example, a searching comparison of the acceptance speeches of Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Hoover should prove illuminating.

4-H CLUB NEWS

Secretaries of 4-H clubs in Oklahoma are provided with one of the most complete registers and guides sent out by the extension office of any state. This is one of the reasons for the high records which the 4-H club members of that state have been making, according to State Leader B. A. Pratt of Stillwater. At the annual 4-H achievement program at Oklahoma City when all the national champions furnished by the state were rounded up they numbered 25.

The secretary's register numbers 92 pages and contains a constitution for a local club, a ritual, methods of carrying on projects, the value of various projects, how to keep minutes and make the monthly and more extended reports, blanks for information and so on. Every help imaginable is included, making it simple for the secretary to keep complete records and make the reports, all of which are necessary if a club is to accomplish things.

Farm boys and girls and their parents all over the country should be inspired by the records which have been made by 4-H club members in the state of Arkansas. You know, this state has not always had the name of being one of the progressive units of the nation. Be that as it may, the state is one of the leaders today in the work of its boys and girls in 4-H projects.

State club agent W. J. Jernigan tells us that there is the biggest call for club work this year of any in the many he has had charge of it. Most everywhere he goes the members are raising money in one way or another so that they can carry on their club program.

One of their ambitions was to have enough money to attend the state camp this month. It now seems close to 2300 will register And in these times!

Eight counties were unable to carry on under club agents, but two have been added, and total enrollment in the counties remaining is ahead of last year. The state has been hard hit by disasters of one kind or another so this is a very good showing.

INGERSOLL-RAND TEAM PLAYS HERE LABOR DAY

The Addison Base Ball Team will finish its League season on Sunday and on Monday, Labor Day, will play the fast Ingersoll-Rand team on Tuscarora Field. This should be a first class game. The Painted Posters number among their victories in the last few weeks, a shut out victory against the Bath team of the Southern Tier League and have beaten practically all the independent teams in this vicinity. The team is composed largely of fast High School players from Painted Post and the Northside, together with a few old timers. Spears and Childs are their leading pitchers and Spears will undoubtedly be in the box against Addison. He is the young man who gave George Crippen's Bath team the coat of whitewash and hit a home run himself for the only score of the game. They will come up Monday with every idea of taking Addison's scalp.

McDermott, Hopper and Young will do the pitching at Blossburg and Monday against the Ingersoll-Rand, which will work at Bloss has not yet been decided and upon the selection for the League's finishing game will depend who will work against Painted Post on Labor Day. The usual big holiday crowd is expected to be on hand for the game and Manager Morris will have all his regulars on hand for the game. The game will be called at 3 P. M. sharp and the usual admission will prevail. This is likely to be the last game of the season and everyone is urged to turn out as a first class game is sure to be the result of the clash.
